Elfriede Jelinek is a poet. Or the translator, Michael Hulse, is a poet. It matters not to me who the responsible party is here. Fact is, this novel is a masterpiece in brutal honesty. Fiction as fact. I know these people she writes about and they exist in the world I live in. They always have. They are my neighbors and we live in the same towns.

Ich bin mir an dieser Stelle nicht ganz sicher ob ich weitere Bücher von Elfriede Jelinek lesen werde. Ich denke mit ein oder zwei Jahren Abstand schon, aber derzeit eher nicht, denn diese Unbarmherzigkeit, mit der sie schreibt, hat mir eine intensive Leseerfahrung bereitet, die erstmal verarbeitet werden muss.

Elfriede Jelinek (German: [ɛlˈfʁiːda ˈjɛlɪnɛk]); born 20 October 1946) is an Austrian playwright and novelist. She was awarded the Nobel Prize in Literature in 2004 for her "musical flow of voices and counter-voices in novels and plays that, with extraordinary linguistic zeal, reveal the absurdity of society's clichés and their subjugating power".

Elfriede Jelinek - Wikipedia

Elfriede Jelinek, född 20 oktober 1946 i Mürrzusschlag i Steiermark, är en österrikisk dramatiker och romanförfattare. [1]Efter en strängt religiös uppfostran och ett engagemang i studentrevolten i maj 1968 har hon skrivit både romaner och dramer om hur Österrike förvaltat sin historia efter andra världskriget. [2] Detta har bland annat gjort henne till en stridbar person och en ...

Austrian novelist Elfriede Jelinek was the surprise choice for the 2004 Nobel Prize in Literature. Jelinek’s fiction, relatively unknown outside of the German-speaking world, is rife with passages of psychological and physical cruelty, reflecting its author’s belief that all humans carry an overpowering degree of inner turmoil and that the world is a tremendously unjust place, especially for women.
